taken the bold step to turn all its permissive routes on their estate into fully adopted bridleways and footpaths that everyone can enjoy. The P4C project has created new routes, improved surfacing on some existing routes and formally designated over 15 km of new public rights of way as bridleways and footpaths - 8 km of which are entirely new routes – improving access for walkers, cyclists, horse riders and mobility scooters. Almost all the improvements undertaken came about through local people getting in contact with ideas on how to improve opportunities for more people to enjoy Penrose and help support local businesses.

The Cornwall LAF, British Horse Society and AONB have been very supportive, offering advice and volunteers have played a vital part in the project.

The Conservation Volunteers built a new boardwalk at Carminowe Creek, local National Trust volunteers have supported the project throughout including installing new waymarkers and local volunteers working with Cornwall College have supported the creation of new access routes.

businesses are available to accompany the new routes. Firstly, a pocket size fold out map guide is available in local tourist centres, destinations and the National Trust. Linked to this is a more in-depth "5Trails" booklet – 20 pages of guided routes, packed with local history, wildlife and practical access details to help people get the most from their visits to the area.

Penrose now offers a traffic – free, exceptionally scenic route between Helston and Porthleven and links directly to the South West Coast Path. Last but not least, for the first time there is now access to Porthleven beach for the mobility impaired.
